Major Sedbrand went [illegible] morning with the captured [illegible] guarded by a detachment of colored cavalry, under the immediate command of Lieutenant Beeman, accompanied by Agent Byrnes who receives the [illegible] from Major Stollsteimer [illegible] out of three hundred horses captured only seventy poor worthless [illegible] the live ones remain. Some of the Indian bad horses shot in the battle and replaced them from the captured band, but many volunteers [illegible] partly for the purpose of plunder. This morning's courier from Glenwood Springs came over the trail and met two men driving out twenty five head of picked ponies, some of them followed by colts. The bunch of sheep and goats were driven away but headed off at Glenwood.

General Crook left on the Rawlins stage this morning, expressing his satisfaction in the [illegible] arrived at. He thinks the old chief has appeared in Garfield county for the last time and that peace is restored and a feeling of security will soon follow. A cantonment will be established at once on the reservation line, and trusty Indians selected to organize an Indian police [illegible] irregularities among the disaffected Utes. Families began starting out of town to-day for the ranches and in a day or two haying will be continued in the valley as if nothing had happened but for the scrutiny of ranch life. A sharp lookout is kept at the front, and a courier to-day brings a report of three [illegible] in the vicinity, presumably looking for horses. Tom Walker, a well known Chaffee county man, had his horse shot, and captured a fine pony in the Indian camp during the engagement.

A FERTILE VALLEY.

Description of the Well Known Four Mile Valley.

One of the Earliest Settled Regions of the County.

Its Natural Resources and Agricultural Advantages.

With a Remarkable Abundance of Natural Curiosities.

When Colorado Springs was yet in the [illegible] and Colorado City [illegible] [illegible] the Four Mile valley, one of the most productive sections of El Paso county was settled. The Pike's Peak excitement in 1859 [illegible] thousands of people to Colorado City, and on the wall [illegible] for gold mines, little attention was given to agricultural pursuits.

As soon however as these settlers [illegible] found themselves wholly deprived of any means of support. They were compelled to turn their attention to stock raising and agriculture. The Fountain valley, the Divide region and several of the [illegible] in the mountains were settled by this class of people.

At first these settlements were made as near to the base of supplies—then Colorado City—as possible, but in the course of a few years they were extended and new regions of country were occupied by actual settlers. Of these regions that of the Four Mile valley was settled during the years 1870-73.

During the wonderful changes that have taken place in this county in the past fifteen years, there is no locality which contains so many who, in western parlance, are termed old settlers, as this. The reason for their remaining in the valley is simply this, that there is no section of El Paso county which offers such flattering [illegible] to the farmer and the stock grower. The first settlers in the valley [illegible] selected what they regarded as suitable places for their residences and began to raise cattle and horses. The land in the valley was not surveyed when the first settlements were made and it was only by several ranchmen combining and advancing several hundred dollars that a survey of the townships in which the valley is located was made. After this survey had been completed the land was taken up in accordance with the laws governing entries on the public domain.

There is every reason to believe that the Indians at one time regarded this valley as a favorite hunting ground, for [illegible] was taken up in that region game of all kinds was quite plentiful and the Indians came there regularly to hunt and fish. It [illegible] these excursions that the only difficulty of which there is any record occurred between the redskins and the settlers.

A ranchman living on a creek known as the Tarryall, some 25 miles from the valley proper, lost a horse, which had been taken by an Indian who belonged to one of these roving bands. He followed the party to where they were encamped near Mt. Pisgah, and entered their camp. He very foolishly sought to have revenge by shooting the Indian whom he found riding the horse, and was murdered.

Of course this affair aroused quite a feeling among the settlers and there was every promise of a genuine war between them and the Indians, if the latter had not adopted a very clever method of getting out of the difficulty. An Indian was given up to the authorities as the one who had perpetrated the deed, but after being brought into court for trial, there was not the slightest evidence that could in any way connect him with the killing. After this occurrence the Indians left the valley and never afterward returned to remain any length of time.

For agricultural purposes this section of El Paso county can hardly be excelled by any other portion of the county. The valley proper extends about twelve miles from north to south, and varies several miles in width. The Four Mile creek a stream some twenty miles [illegible] twin flows through it, and were its waters utilized it would irrigate many hundred acres. This stream is bordered on both sides by beautiful meadows, and a heavy growth of willows along its banks gives it a very picturesque and pleasing appearance. There is not a vacant piece of land along the creek in its course through the valley.

The scenery in the valley is of a varied character. The width of the valley permits of an extended view of the mountains and an idea of the height and immensity of Pike's Peak is gained which cannot be found in any part of the county. On the eastern side of the valley the mountains rise almost precipitously while on the west there is a succession of low hills, between which are beautiful little open places or parks which afford pasturage for cattle and stock. The valley proper is quite heavily timbered, though the supply of timber has been somewhat exhausted of late years to supply several saw mills, one of which is now in operation there.

The light snows of winter and the frequent rains in the spring and summer permit the growing of crops without any irrigation whatever. There are many ranchmen who have lived in that neighborhood for years who have supported themselves and families from the products of ground which has never received any benefit from irrigation. Oats, potatoes, barley, etc., do very well on this kind of soil and the only [illegible] hindrance to the raising of crops [illegible] these circumstances would be a lack of rain or severe hail storms.

It would be [illegible] [illegible]

The distance of this region from, and the means of access to market have been such that the growers of grain for profit and support would hardly pay. But the building and operation of the Midland will eventually produce a great change in the character of this region. The ranchmen will find that they will have to compete with the Kansas and Nebraska product, and will not sell them so handsomely as formerly. They will thus be compelled to turn their attention to something else in the agricultural line. Then will it be seen that the resources of this section have not been developed at least fifty per cent.

Florissant, the nearest station on the Midland to the valley, must sooner or later become a supply depot and shipping point for this region of country. The farthest ranch in Four Mile valley is only eighteen miles from Florissant, and the county road leading through it is one of the best in the county.

While [illegible] may believe that the Midland will not [illegible] but rather [illegible] the value of their [illegible] it will [illegible] fit in one [illegible] at least. If men are cultivating land, the products of which [illegible] repay them for their trouble and afford them means of support, the [illegible] they realize it the better, and there is no better means to ascertain this fact than by putting their product in competition with the products of land differently situated with regard to climate and soil.

But with so many advantages it is hardly possible that this section of the county can [illegible] be [illegible] the most profitable agricultural region in this portion of [illegible] [illegible] supply of water for irrigation, and a climate difficult to surpass, it possesses all the qualifications which go to make up a successful and profitable farming region.

While this valley offers so many inducements to the farmer, it also possesses many attractions for the tourist and health seeker. This valley of the Four Mile has long been noted as being a locality which abounds in many natural curiosities, the great petrified stumps, the remains of [illegible] and other prehistoric animals, and the abundance of [illegible] formations all attract the naturalist and scientist. Perhaps the petrified stumps from their nearness to the regular routes of travel and the notice which has been given them have attracted the most attention of these curiosities. Tourists and natural curiosity seekers have carried away a greater portion of what petrified wood appears above the ground. But there is one immense stump which will always remain to testify to the greatness of the trees which flourished at one time in that locality. The ranch on which this and several other stumps are located was purchased two years ago by a syndicate of Denver capitalists. Their intention was to remove this stump which is forty feet in circumference, to Denver, where they hoped to derive a considerable income by exhibiting it. An engine was purchased and several saws, with which they intended to cut the stump into slabs in order that it could be transported. But their efforts ended in failure and this immense body of petrified wood will always remain where it now is. This is not the only remains of petrified stumps in that vicinity, as a ranchman who has resided in that neighborhood for several years, stated to the writer that he knew of 100 different petrified stumps in that locality, embracing nearly every kind of wood.

In close proximity to the petrified stump, of which mention has been made, there is a large fossil or shale bed which has been partially developed. Many complete specimens of fossilized fish, reptiles, insects and plants have been found here some of which have been deposited at the Smithsonian Institute at Washington. A party of students connected with Harvard college also gathered some specimens from the bed nine years ago.

In the mountains along the east side of the valley some perfect remains of mastodons have been found, and at the present time a ranchman in that locality is at work [illegible] to view one of these immense animals which he had discovered embedded in the earth.

This wonderful locality can be visited without the slightest hardship or inconvenience. As it is only a little over two miles from Florissant, one could stop at the hotel at that place. A splendid road leads right to the vicinity of the stumps and fossils, so that the trip would be in every sense an enjoyable and interesting one. [illegible] is a brief description of one of the most interesting sections of El Paso county, and which is destined soon to take a leading [illegible] as an agricultural region.

B. W. STEELE, Manager of the GAZETTE.

We publish this morning a letter that should create a decided sensation among all lovers of justice and fairness. It was written by a member of Company A of the [illegible] of the Colorado National guards. He is a man of good judgment and unimpeachable honesty. The account he gives of the battle at Rangely and the proceedings before and after the battle is clear and well connected and may be accepted as reliable. In reading this, it should be remembered that it was written by one of our state soldiers. It cannot be said, therefore, that it is the view of an Indian sympathizer. His opinion of Kendall's gang is the same as we have expressed for the last two weeks. He settles one doubted question. The Indians and the Indian agent and the United States [illegible] claimed that the Indians were [illegible] and [illegible] by the whites. All reports from Rangely have studiously tried to convey contrary impressions. It now appears from this letter that Kendall was in pursuit of the Indians and did surprise them in camp. It clearly places the responsibility for this fight on the [illegible] [illegible]

[illegible] and to the [illegible] of Folsom and Jack Ward who were killed in the fight that Kendall forced and which should never have taken place.

Ticknor & Co., of Boston have just [illegible] a collection of the satires on [illegible] which [illegible] in the Chicago News.

The cartoon of the Denver News entitled the "Nation's Wards" has rather a serious mistake in it. The little babe in the [illegible] of the snake should be colored and not white. The only child in this war killed was an Indian pappoose.

The increase of the deposits in the New York savings banks for the first six months of this year was $20,000,000. In New York city the increase was $4,000,000. The men represented by this increase prefer to shield poverty by savings banks rather than by political parties.

The eastern idea of the trouble in Garfield county is altogether unique. Briefly stated, it is that a band of white marauders and horse-thieves have been commissioned by the state of Colorado to prey upon a community of civilized red men, quietly pursuing their peaceful [illegible] in the White River valley, to murder their wives and children, destroy their crops and run off their horses, sheep and goats.—Leadville Herald Democrat.

There is more history than sarcasm in the above. Read the letter from one of the boys at the front.

The Denver News still prides itself on the accuracy of the news of its war correspondent. The following from the special in yesterday's paper is a good sample of its kind of accuracy.

From the above we learn the following:

First—That one estimate the loss of Indians as low as three.

Second—All agree that there were seven Indians killed, and Third—That this latter statement tallies with Agent Byrnes, who declares that no Indians were killed.

We should think the general government might have something to say as to the payment for the Indian ponies stolen by the whites, out of the balance of the Indian annuity. If this money belongs to the Indians it is wrong to use it in paying for white men's crimes. If it belongs to the general government we should think it would object to paying for the injury done by a sheriff's posse. The only right way to do is to pay for the loss [illegible] either out of the state treasury or the treasury of Garfield county. Just now the government is partially pledged to deliver up the two Indians accused of horse stealing. How would it do for Indian Agent Byrnes to demand of the [illegible] the fifty odd horse thieves that are with Kendall? It ought to be just as bad for a white man to steal a horse as for an Indian.

The national government proposes to [illegible] the state authorities to give up the [illegible] on [illegible] to marauding [illegible] Indians. We sincerely hope [illegible] before the order reaches the [illegible] of our brave boys in the field, [illegible] will have been [illegible] to ranches in various parts of the county. The United States government is putting its foot in it. It was bad enough to put out these Indians to infest the country, and the present attempt to act as their allies against the state is nothing short of an outrage. We don't want to see any trouble over the matter between the national and state governments, but we do hope that the news will go forward to the camp at Rangely in time for every hoof of this stock to be disposed of. Run it off, boys, and run it off so effectually that the federal soldiers will never find a trace of it.—Aspen Times.

The above was written by a white man! It is the first case in which the serving of a writ for horse stealing is supposed to carry with it the right to steal some from others.

It is a fact that the GAZETTE is criticising the course of the governor in calling out the troops. We say at the time that his responsibility was over when he was called on for troops by the lawless people of Garfield county. While we did not think the facts warranted the calling out of the state troops, yet we did not condemn the governor. What we did and do criticise him for is this:—After he knew he was deceived he should not have allowed the state troops to take the field. We urged him two weeks ago not to allow the troops to help Kendall in serving the writs. Had he taken our advice the battle at Rangely never would have been fought, the stain of violating a truce would never have tarnished the fair name of Colorado and the brave dead would now be alive. Governor Adams is not to be criticised for calling out the troops but, after he knew he was deceived, for allowing the troops to take the field.

It is a mere quibble to say that an effort is being made to make political capital when the governor is criticised for allowing the troops to bring on fighting instead of protecting life, and when disgraceful acts of the [illegible] are condemned. The questions involved are far more important than the success of either party, for they involve the honor of the state, and the decency of our race. Not to condemn, is to endorse the violation of a flag of truce, to sympathize with horse thieves, and to approve the men whose ambition murdered Folsom. We do not defend the Utes for any bad acts and we have always favored any "white" (not Kendall's [illegible]) to [illegible] them. But while we [illegible] the Indians for horse stealing, for killing [illegible] for [illegible] ing the [illegible] barbarism of their race in using the scalping knife, for [illegible] ous violations of faith and for [illegible] [illegible] we condemn the white thieves [illegible] for the same offenses. The only ones charged with the first three offenses, to our disgrace be it said, are the whites. To do this is to shield Jong [illegible] to treat such [illegible] on the part of whites as a common [illegible] is to libel our race.

Mr. Paul Rajon, the distinguished French artist, while in this country in the winter of 1886-7, received from the editor of The Studio a commission to execute a portrait of Mrs. Cleveland for that journal. Mr. Rajon welcomed the opportunity to add the portrait of Mrs. Cleveland to those of the other distinguished personages of our time whose faces he etched, and Mrs. Cleveland [illegible] his request to give the artist a sitting. Mr. Rajon was invited to Washington, and made the requisite studies at the White House. In two sittings the artist secured a most [illegible] likeness, and from this drawing he has made an etching which is pronounced by those who have seen it, who are familiar with his works, one of the most brilliant and expressive of all his portraits. The etching was promised to appear in the July number of The Studio, but the demands of Mr. Rajon's time and the many delays of transit, of custom house routine, and so forth, incident to such undertakings, have made necessary the postponement of the appearance of the July number for several weeks. The plate is now ready for delivery, and we congratulate the publishers of The Studio on the successful completion of an undertaking which ought to be of interest to all Americans since Americans everywhere, without distinction of party must welcome the likeness, drawn with his best skill by one of the chief artists of our time, of a lady who is the charming ideal of all that we hold best in our country women.

The Studio has ceased to be an experiment and is now firmly planted in the public good will. The July number begins a new volume—the third—and no other art journal published anywhere offers a more varied and valuable programme than the one which this journal announces for the coming year. Etchings by the best talent at home and abroad have already been published and more are promised by such names as Rajon, Chase, Blum, Bacher, Sidney L. Smith and Henry Farrer, while every number contains copies of pictures made from the originals by the new photogravure process.

The July number contains an etching of Mrs. Grover Cleveland by Rajon, which is one of the most beautiful works of the kind that we know of and in addition six full page illustrations, two of them from etchings by Rembrandt, to accompany an article by Mr. [illegible] Greenleaf, the curator of the Boston Museum of Fine Arts, and three from [illegible] in the [illegible] collection. The portrait of Pope Leo XIII by Gaillard, "The Poor Fisherman," by Puvis de Chavannes, and the "[illegible] of a [illegible]" by the sculptor Falguiere.

A Banker Arrested.

[illegible] Sept. [illegible] A warrant has been issued for the arrest of ex-President Taylor of the Bank of [illegible] [illegible] has already accepted. Being [illegible] funds entrusted him for investment by R. M. Meredith, who caused his arrest. [illegible] not invested. A strong feeling, however, prevails [illegible] of the real case is being suppressed.

Gladstone's Position.

LONDON, September [illegible]—Gladstone has written a reply to the Duke of Argyll's recent attack. He says: "The Duke of Argyll is an old friend, whose attacks I prefer bearing silently. I do not excuse tyranny, but I wish to have the national league dealt with legally, and not by arbitrary decree of the viceroy or chief secretary for Ireland."

THE TRUTH.

An Account of the Indian Campaign by a Participant.

The following letter on the Indian campaign is written for the GAZETTE, by a member of Company A:

CAMP AT RANGELY, ON WHITE RIVER, August 2[illegible]

We are lying here awaiting orders but what they will be we are only conjecturing. There is a new horse sale which and it looks to me as though the outfit that are helping to enforce the law against two Ute horse thieves are the biggest thieves of the lot. The [illegible] to return the Indians don't want to [illegible] to be allowed to stay on the reservation unmolested. When we took them on the 20th at the junction of Wolf creek and White river they were making for the reservation. They [illegible] and we [illegible] had no orders to fight and Major Leslie had a talk with them through another party, Pray, who was leading a party of scouts or thieves, I hardly know which, but I think the latter. The Indians agreed to remain there under a flag of truce till Major Leslie could hear from headquarters at Meeker. They waited on the top of a bluff, about half a mile distant, for nearly five hours when a [illegible] and his scouts [illegible] and they vamoosed, and didn't go slow either. "Boots and saddles" was the order and in a short time the command was in the saddle and on the march in pursuit. We followed till dark and most of our horses were completely worn out and the men wet and tired. About 4 p.m. we were overtaken by sheriff Kendall and his posse and traveled down the river, our troops on the south side and Kendall on the north. We went into camp together, killed a beef and had supper as well as we could. Before supper had hardly begun sheriff Kendall had a party whose horses could stand it, ready for a move to the front. About twenty-five men from our battalion, Companies A, B and C, and some from the Aspen company, under Major Leslie, and the best of Kendall's party, started down the river in pursuit. The rest of our party fed the horses and went to bed after most of the cowboys had spun some yarns of their [illegible] with the Utes on their trip north of Meeker. One particularly [illegible] mouthed, long haired cuss thought he could do up the whole Ute tribe [illegible]. Next morning our troops, in command of Captain Saxton, started [illegible] for the front at a pretty good gait, and we all felt pretty good but not very strong, as we had had no bread nor coffee, and fresh beef [illegible] was rather too strong for the boys' stomachs. We forded White river and followed it on the south side till about 10 a.m., when a courier [illegible] from the front, reporting that our advance party had [illegible] a Ute camp and were hotly engaged, about eight miles down the river. Now Captain Saxton and the battalion went to the front at a charging gait and the horses [illegible] to catch the spirit of the [illegible] and [illegible] forward with renewed life. After a ride of six or eight miles we came up with some of the rear guards of the party and a wounded man going [illegible] over the bluffs and rocks, in which the Indians had hid and [illegible] ridge to ridge, but could not catch them. When A troop came up with our boys, who had gone on with the advance, there were glad greetings and hearty handshakes to find them all right after their baptism of fire. From now on the Indians [illegible] and only showed themselves at long range distance on the crest of the ridges. Attention was now paid to the dead and wounded, of whom there were one dead and two hard hit—Jack Ward shot through the heart, Doc Lamont, through the side and back and a lieutenant of the Aspen company, through the arm and chest and who died the next day in camp. Now came the hardest and saddest part of our campaign, taking those wounded men to the rear, over a trail just as bad as the worst places on the Pikes Peak trail. We made a litter of aspen poles and blankets on which [illegible] four or five miles we packed Doc Lamont and Lieutenant Folsom. [illegible] wagon were secured and we went on at a walk without stopping till we got back to Rangely where we went into camp and placed our [illegible] ponies in a field and corral. Now some of our forces began to show their hands [illegible] forms seen as they could drive the Indian ponies and [illegible] off. [illegible] and [illegible] get away with [illegible] them during the night and next morning came back [illegible] boys "say" What was going on there was great [illegible] the sheriff and his posse and it looked as if they were stealing [illegible] on a pretense [illegible] found Pray and his gang with a lot of Indian ponies [illegible] up the river and to hold under Sheriff Kendall [illegible] ponies and [illegible] with supplies. This night was one of [illegible] [illegible] down the river between the camp and the battlefield and the wagon and [illegible] [illegible] was [illegible] [illegible] from all fears of an Indian attack. We had a strong guard posted on a high bluff which was a complete position to command the road and Indian trail coming into camp. The guard entrenched and the camp felt ready for any emergency. The night passed without any [illegible] and at daybreak we were [illegible] for whatever was in store for us. The first thing that we found was that a man who was with Troop B was missing but his companions thought he was gone to the rear with some Ute ponies which he had rounded up and tried to steal, but it proved his death, for today a party of our scouts found his dead body, and that of his horse too. One of our wounded men died on the 25th and we feared Jack Ward, who was shot [illegible] on the field. The following night I was in charge of the guard on top of the ridge, and we had a good trench and breastworks and with twenty men we could have held a hundred Utes at bay easily. The night passed without any [illegible] alarm. We [illegible] that the Indians don't want to fight and that if they had not been fired upon [illegible] would not have fought when [illegible] some of the [illegible] Buchanan, who was in charge of [illegible] and they had followed along [illegible] from the agency who [illegible] of the fight and had started to help [illegible] [illegible] visited by the officer [illegible] join the main [illegible] they won't [illegible] [illegible] is the [illegible] for the present.

Yours, [illegible]

STATE PRESS ON THE UTE TROUBLE.

The Most the Worse.

[illegible]

We are sorry to say that the news [illegible] the Kendall [illegible] to give to the [illegible] for [illegible] the country.

The News by Way of San Juan.

Kendall and his party are satisfied that [illegible] last week [illegible]. The Indians are murdering the defenseless ranchmen and pillaging their houses. The Indian war, with all its attendant horrors, is upon us again.

Not Creditable Means.

Denver Americ[illegible].

There is nobody don't that [illegible] is now and finally freed from the Utes. The manner of their taking off is by no means credited to Kendall, but let us thank heaven for the consummation and forget the [illegible].

Military Gushers.

Montrose M[illegible].

Governor Adams has gone to the front. Had he gone ten days ago the state would have been saved thousands of dollars. While the governor may have been sincere in his official acts, he has been led into error by his military gushers at the front.

[illegible]

Pueblo Evening Star.

As long as these bloody devils were murdering ranchmen and stealing stock Uncle Sam paid no attention to them or to the appeals of the state authorities for protection of the frontiersman. But the moment an Indian bites the dust on [illegible] the soldiers and orders the militia and cowboys to keep off the reservation.

[illegible] of War.

Fort Collins Courier.

If Governor Adams would arm a company of well drilled soldiers and send the boys out to [illegible] the Ute war correspondents, he would be doing the state a great service, and make his calling and re-election sure. If the Denver papers are to be believed there are ten special [illegible] at the front to every Ute in the state.

How it [illegible]

The Glenwood correspondent of the Denver Democrat says Sheriff Kendall's war originated in a horse race between the Utes and some cowboys for hot [illegible] which the Utes won. The cowboys refused to give up the horse, and the Indians broke down the corral and stampeded the animals. The cowboys had the Indians indicted for horse stealing, and the attempt to serve the warrants for their arrest has caused the trouble.

[illegible] Elsewhere.

Denver News—Democratic.

This will end the great Ute war and the state troops will be permitted to return home and rest on their hard-earned [illegible] of the [illegible] of paying West and Hearlan about twenty dollars per day. The next time Colorow wants to visit the reservation to hunt, he should be seen by an agent of the state and induced to hunt in the opposite direction. Such a scheme would save our brave militia a vast amount of wear and tear, and the state treasury a large draft, which it can ill afford to pay.

Summing Up.

Greeley Tribune.

It is absolutely impossible to give the exact truth in regard to the Indian troubles. One week ago the whites, composed of the sheriff's posse and a portion of the militia, had a fight with the redskins. Deputy Sheriff Ward, Lieutenant Folsom and [illegible] Goshorn (Wild Billy) were killed and three other "pale faces" wounded. The loss of the Indians is variously stated at from three to eight killed and six to thirteen wounded. It is certain that the Indians were attempting to reach the reservation without a fight, but were compelled to fight to defend themselves. The whites [illegible] and sheep. But the United States [illegible] has [illegible] there. Several state officials, including the governor, [illegible] are holding a [illegible] and [illegible] [illegible] home. The [illegible]

The Great Sun.

But the greatest [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] the [illegible] and Colorow's [illegible] conference. In [illegible] by the front [illegible] barbarous [illegible] directed by Major Leslie, Sheriff Kendall, and [illegible] two hours [illegible] of the reservation [illegible] women and children with them. [illegible] first two [illegible] Several braves [illegible]

In [illegible] the [illegible] [illegible] substantial [illegible] the [illegible] were forced [illegible] to [illegible] in and [illegible] the field.

A [illegible]

The latest dispatches from the scene of the Ute war, estimate, in too strong terms, that the [illegible] results [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] reported to have [illegible] [illegible] to their [illegible] [illegible] the worst of [illegible] the one battle that was fought [illegible] [illegible] the number of [illegible] reported killed. [illegible] to the exact number of [illegible] killed that [illegible] [illegible] for [illegible] [illegible] the Utes were pounced upon [illegible] and have no doubt been taught a lesson that they cannot monkey with "cowboys dressed up as soldiers," as they have dubbed the volunteer militia.

POLITICAL PORTRAITS.

Judge Hallett.

In the history of politics there often occur epochs when the moral elements of a small minority [illegible] of a state. So slight a [illegible] was resistance. [illegible] severe.

In [illegible] moral [illegible] the spirit of [illegible] [illegible] the base elements of political life [illegible] [illegible] ruthless [illegible] [illegible] of citizenship, and without wish [illegible] the country give themselves up to the effeminating luxury of [illegible] politics are [illegible] and [illegible] like vandals [illegible] treasures [illegible]

The flood of corruption is on us. Will it be checked? Will the hills come down to stop the torrent, or shall the destruction go on till liberty is engulfed? God only knows.

A curse upon our silly age of bric-a-brac! A curse upon the expense and luxury of [illegible] to life that keeps men on the grind for gold and [illegible] the manly forces of character out of the course of political greatness and into the council of political death.

What are we getting out of life—art? No—a shabby and contemptible luxury. We have no noble forms or conceptions of art among us. Our sentiment of art is expressed in cheap effects of bric-a-brac.

Whenever there is a great conception of public duty there will be a product of great public men. When otherwise than otherwise this is the unchangeable law. Our present [illegible] is bric-a-brac, and Queen Anne stairs and decorated scoop shovels.

High society is a gibbering, racketing, harlequinade without any clearer conceptions of high art than of high public duty, though doubtless with an amiable inclination toward both.

Our highest and purest [illegible] distinction the [illegible] channels that do not lead to public life, and those whose [illegible] culture [illegible] entitles them to direct affairs, yield the [illegible] up to a petty and seductive traffic in [illegible] [illegible] try to the chaffering huck[illegible] of politics. If here and there some choice spirit among them has the noble ambition to rise and gain a [illegible] way for the public good he finds no [illegible] chance among his caste. They applaud his conceptions of duty at first, but his earnestness bores them and they leave him to fight his own battle with the Arabs that surround the polls.

We have all the evils of social caste without any of its noble pride and loyalty to the duties of position. They recognize [illegible] of the high obligations of a caste toward public life. Their patriotism is absorbed in the mean ambition to [illegible] office in brica-brac.

I believe perfectly in the principle of universal suffrage. I believe in the absolute and inherent right of all men and all women to share all the honors of government. I believe particularly in [illegible] the lower class—the class which is below the social meridian. But I think the class above that line ought to feel itself under a high moral obligation not to see public life utterly vulgarized by wickedness or ambitious ignorance.

A government to be thoroughly representative should represent the best at least as fully as the worst. Will anybody pretend to say that the government of Colorado does?

In one particular it does, and in that particular the pride of a class governs and the obligations of caste toward public duty are fully and fairly recognized. I refer to the judiciary. It is open to all on one single qualification—the ability to understand its duties, yet that single limit imposes a voluntary sense of obligation on an influential class of citizens to see to it that the service is not vulgarized.

The same results might easily be extended if the better elements would recognize their political duty.

No man really known to be inefficient or unworthy could even buy his way to the bench in Colorado, rotten as we are, because the honor of a professional class interposes. Yet in the matter of the United States senatorship, a position of equal importance to the honor and dignity of the state, any vulgar creature that blunders onto a fortune is free to debauch public life to gratify his ridiculous ambition for notoriety, and no sense of duty among the better elements interposes to arrest the danger and disgrace.

Our political life is rotten. To deny it is to close our eyes at midday and say the sun does not shine.

It is not a matter of one party more than another. It is in all parties and in all places.

High or low there does not exist in the public life of Colorado any respect for the moral obligations of an oath. I understand the appalling significance of my words. I speak by the rule. One man often may be an exception to it, and I make three-fourths of the judiciary an emphatic and honorable exception out of this shameful state of morals.

The legal obligations are of course still recognized, but in the very nature of things it is impossible to enforce the moral obligations in most cases, except through the moral sentiments.

In commercial life the influence of moral sentiments are still effective, and an honorable character has a high trade value. But in politics the moral structure is utterly broken down.

We still have the virtue to punish the petty crime of robbing a hen roost, but the crime of stealing public lands, which [illegible] accomplished without the rankest perjury of the soul, [illegible] A few men [illegible] had [illegible] particular [illegible] follows [illegible] [illegible] political [illegible] [illegible] liberties.

[illegible] by the same influences [illegible] [illegible] these things are [illegible] [illegible] and the [illegible] [illegible] lack of [illegible]

Why [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] in politics [illegible]

I speak [illegible] [illegible] responsibility for our political depravity rests [illegible] [illegible] they sink [illegible] cowardly [illegible] sanction to the most infamous of crimes [illegible] of liberty [illegible] must inevitably bring down that same [illegible] [illegible] who has the ambition to draw his sword.

It is [illegible] much a want of [illegible] in their country as a temporary want of interest in public affairs which makes the better classes suffer [illegible] in this infamy.

The better elements are the majority. I feel as certain of this as I do of anything in existence. But they are the unorganized majority. Through a perverted sense of self-respect they resent organization and without organization nothing can be done in politics. When they are aroused to some spasmodic effort they bungle and fail and subside. They have not the information nor the trained skill that gives form to purpose. They see the evil but they do not perceive the source of it. They lay it to universal suffrage and the lower [illegible] This is a superficial view and shows that they have given no deep thought to the subject. It is a conclusion against the whole philosophy of nature. The vices of political life have their cause [illegible], not below.

The [illegible] do not bribe the rich. I insist that the legislation [illegible] from above and works its wicked purpose [illegible] the better class [illegible] which I do not [illegible] simply the rich people but the well [illegible] rich or [illegible] do not stand up for their convictions. They are cowardly. They [illegible] the [illegible] and primaries and of course when they [illegible] at the ballot box they are [illegible]

The politics of Colorado has been corrupted chiefly through the United States senatorships. Nothing would be [illegible] than to make an end of this main source of corruption if the better elements would do their duty. But the flood of corruption [illegible] and God alone knows where it will end.

I see but one man among us whose intellectual superiority and moral [illegible] [illegible] the foul tide that is inundating our whole political system.

That man is Moses Hallett, judge of the United States court for the district of Colorado.

He is well known. He has stood for twenty years the guardian and administrator of justice among us and the continuous and unhesitating verdict on his character has been expressed throughout in the one word "stainless."

I am not sufficiently acquainted with the man to give any sketch of his character worthy to be called a "portrait." His life lies out of the sphere in which I mostly circulate and probably altogether. I have not spent an hour nor perhaps half an hour in his company. But though I do not know him personally I know well his repute among men. I took the trouble with a view to this article to seek the opinions of ten prominent lawyers of both political parties and embracing his bitterest enemies as well his friends men who have practiced before his bar for years and ought to know his real character. Those opinions may be summarized as follows:

No. 1. I don't like the man. He's a Jew. You can see he's a Jew and his name don't [illegible] Moses but—oh yes, incorruptible—oh absolutely incorruptible.

No. 2. Don't know any more about politics than a child but a splendid, [illegible] and fearless.

No. 3. He has a fine legal mind and a well marked judicial temper, but ain't got the get up in him for politics—honorable—oh the very soul of honor. Make a splendid senator—never get there though, can't work the ropes when it comes down to politics. Then he's poor—couldn't put up for the campaign.

No. 4. I consider Judge Hallett an honor to manhood. His character is spotless. There is no truckling in him. I've known him for twenty years and in that time the breath of suspicion has never rested on his honor. He is a most admirable judge.

No. 5. He's very considerate with us young fellows, especially if we prepare our cases well, but he's savage on a tricky lawyer. Yes he would make a splendid senator, but lord! such a man could never pull through with a Colorado legislature. Fine legal mind—oh, unquestionably—but don't understand politics—actually joined the committee of 100 to watch the Denver polls in '81—boys would never forgive him for that.

No. 6. I've known him ever since he struck the state. Washed gold up in Gregory gulch in '60—strapping' hand some young fellow then. Came down to Denver that winter and opened a law office with Judge Bennet over in West Denver. Solid citizen—never a stain on his honor. Rich? No, but the judge is comfortably off. Always been a saving man and lived in moderate style and he's got a comfortable property. When it comes to integrity he's there as solid as Plymouth rock. Never catch him into any political dirt. He an honor to the state in any position. He an honor to the whole country in the [illegible] Not a man in Colorado knows the [illegible] of the state better than Hallett, and my,

[illegible] [illegible] of politics since [illegible] [illegible] the early days was in the Territorial [illegible]

[illegible] good in the county.

[illegible]

[illegible] Cape Cod Yankee [illegible] unknown to fame.

He was born in Galena, Illinois, in 1834. His father was one of the [illegible] [illegible] settled [illegible] Rock River country where Congressman Hitt and Senator Cullom of Illinois and the late General John A. Rawlins chief of staff to General Grant, and since secretary of war, were his schoolmates. He finished his education at Beloit college, Wisconsin. Studied law and was admitted to the bar at Chicago and after practicing a few months took the Pike's Peak fever and struck out for Colorado where he arrived in 1860 at the age of twenty-six, with about $200 in his pocket. During his first summer he "worked a rocker" up in the gold placers of Clear creek and in the fall came to Denver and opened a law office. In 1863, and again in 1865 he was elected to the territorial council and in 1866 was appointed, through the influence of General Rawlins, chief justice of the territory to which position he was twice reappointed by President Grant.

When the state was admitted one senatorship was [illegible] to Chaffee by [illegible] For the other senatorship Chilcott, Hallett, Teller and Jackson were candidates. Of [illegible] Teller got it. Grant then gave Hallett the judgeship of the new judicial district, which [illegible] the whole state, and he has since kept out of politics and devoted himself very closely to the duties of his court.

The sentiment with which Judge Hallett is regarded over the state is that of profound and proud respect. I frequently hear him mentioned in widely different sections as a man whom many of our best and most earnest people would be gratified to see elected to the senate. It is unquestionably a consummation that would greatly raise the character of the state in the very place it greatly needs raising. It is a [illegible] mation I am satisfied which would be hailed as the dawn of a new and cleaner epoch in politics by four-fifths of the people of the state. It is a [illegible] mation I am certain which might easily be achieved, but which never can be achieved while the better elements refuse to make an organized effort to give expression to their will and are affected toward the public [illegible] perverted sense of self [illegible] which is the last aspect of a stubborn and stupid individualism.

A strong, incorruptible man in high public life dominates the [illegible] effect over the politics of a state as the influence of a noble statue in a public square exerts upon the artistic sentiments of a town.

We have not a single public statue in Colorado to-day, but we have a million decorated scoop-shovels.

We have not among us, raised up by the sovereignty of our ballots to be a model to the people, a single man in public life the splendor and purity of whose character is calculated to ennoble and dignify our conceptions of politics and constantly fertilize in our hearts the sentiment of patriotism—but we are at any rate propagating and embellishing at great expense for our temple of liberty a good many rare curiosities of ambition.

It is all despicable bric-a-brac—or [illegible] gigantic corruption.

Do we not owe something to ourselves. Yes we have need to raise up before our eyes the model of a stainless and incorruptible man.

Observer Sherwood, of the signal service, says that unless more interest is taken in the display of weather signals in this city, the report will be sent to some other town in the state. The reports are supplied to ten points in Colorado at government expense, and there are several unsupplied towns that would be glad to get them. The board of trade or the citizens should take up this matter. It would be a good idea to erect a flag staff on the top of some one of the highest buildings in the city, the new Robertson block, for an instance, and display the signals regularly. Mr. Sherwood is endeavoring to have Colorado Springs made a first class station, and if he [illegible] co-operation and encouragement the city is likely to soon be placed on the same footing as Denver in the matter of local state and national weather reports.

At the First Presbyterian church this morning Rev. Dr. Lowrie, of Illinois will preach. Dr. Lowrie was pastor of this church twelve years ago and filled the pulpit for two years. He is a brother of Architect Lowrie of Denver, and is visiting in this city with his mother. In the evening the pastor, Rev. J. S. Black, will preach. This will be the last time Mr. Black will occupy the pulpit until the middle of October, as he leaves shortly for a vacation of six weeks in the [illegible] For the [illegible] Sundays Rev. D. L. McCrae, [illegible] of the Central Presbyterian church of Denver, will supply Mr. Black's pulpit and further announcements will be made later.
